Sandy Glacier Caves

Newly discovered ice caves in Sandy Glacier are believed to be the largest glacier caves in the lower 48. It is predicted that, due to a warming climate, these caves will be completely gone in 7-10 years.

Mount Hood

At 11,240 feet, Mount Hood is the highest point in Oregon. By 2009, 63,177 acres surrounding the dormant volcano were designated Wilderness, though several key areas and watersheds remain unprotected.

Red Tree Vole

Red tree voles are highly specialized, nocturnal mammals that live in old growth Douglas fir trees and feed on pine needles. Due to the destruction of their habitat, they are considered a near-

Olaalie Scenic Area

Olaalie Lake, a snow fed alpine lake, is a popular layover for PCT hikers. Conservationists recently won a victory to prevent the PCT route just north of the lake from being aggressively

Mount Jefferson

Recreation opportunities abound in the Mount Jefferson Wilderness, as well as vital habitat for deer, black bear, bald eagles and

Whitebark Pine

Pinus albicaulis is found at high elevation, but fire suppression and a warming climate has made the species vulnerable to pine beetle outbreaks and fungal infections. The US Fish and Wildlife Service has warned the species

Waldo Lake

Waldo Lake is over 10 square miles and Oregon's second largest non-alkali lake. It is named after conservationist John B. Waldo, who recorded a trek from here to Mount Shasta, a route that would

Three Sisters

The Three Sisters Wilderness is one of the most popular Wilderness areas in Oregon, and its second largest. It has the distinction of being among the first Wilderness areas designated by

Crater Lake

First preserved in 1902, Crater Lake National Park is one of Oregon's most inspiring destinations. Unfortunately, nearby mining claims and logging projects just outside the park threaten forests and

Sky Lakes

Designated in 1984, the Sky Lakes Wilderness has over 200 pools, from small ponds to 40 acre lakes. Some of these pools contain the purest natural lake-water in the

OR-7 and Pups

Wolves have recently returned to the Oregon Cascades after a nearly 60 year absence. OR-7, a radio collared wolf from Eastern Oregon, made a historic journey all the way to California and has now settled down with a mate and litter in the proposed

Pacific Fisher

The fisher is a large, elusive cousin to the weasel and one of the few animals to prey on porcupines. Their numbers have dwindled recently as many are poisoned by illegal marijuana grows

Wildlands

- Built momentum for our 500,000-acre Crater Lake Wilderness campaign, securing tens of thousands of individual petition signatures, and presenting to dozens of people at hikes and events.
- Launched the Ochoco Mountains National Recreation Area campaign to protect traditional recreation on over 300,000 acres and safeguard principal is invested in perpetuity in new Oregon Wild members in over a decade and we are setting targets to surpass that number in the coming year.
- Through our forest watchdog program we stopped logging at the Vista Ridge Wildlife Lobby Day, with 40 attendees coming to Salem to meet with legislators and advocate for pro-wildlife policy.
- Launched Wild Ones, a wildlife activist network and training resource, with 100 members and growing. Subsequently we developed an activist curriculum for Wild Ones and held a series of 8 classes to teach people the ins and outs of how to participate in public processes.
- Launched the Oregon Brewshed® Alliance along with 7 brewery/beer community charter members in April and more than doubled membership in less than 5 months.
- Convened a U.S. District Court Judge to hold the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service accountable by demanding that the agency release a Comprehensive Conservation Plan for Klamath refuges by August 2016. This could be the best chance in years to reform leased and commercial farming on 22,000 acres of refuge land.
- Worked with the Governor's office and the Oregon State Parks Department to bring the Molalla and Chetco Rivers just a few steps away from State Scenic Waterways protection.

Oregon Wild
 2015 ANNUAL REPORT
 GUIDE TO THE PCT INSIDE

SEAN STEVENS
 Executive Director

VIK ANANTHA
 Board President

For the wild,
 We're honored to work with you to keep our state a special place.
 Thank you for being such a vital part of the Oregon Wild community.
 You can read more about our accomplishments elsewhere in this report.
 While many of our efforts are built for the long haul (you don't convince Congress to do something overnight), we made marked progress in several campaigns and celebrated clear victories in other efforts. You can read more about our accomplishments elsewhere in this report.

Our work to protect wilderness, safeguard native species like wolves, and conserve the last of our ancient forests is resonating with the public. The past decade and we are setting targets to surpass that number in the coming year. The board of directors infused over $200,000 into the fund last year and the principal is invested in perpetuity in order to provide additional financial stability for protecting against future attacks on Oregon's wild places.

As our financial statements attest, our fiscal health is solid and sustained. With all of your continued support, our revenue topped out with over one million dollars for the second straight year. We are in a confident position to expand our staff in the coming fiscal year and deepen our impact.
